SWIFT ACTION IN SPAIN RESULTS IN MARTIAL LAW

Night-Long Disorders, Bombings, Rioting are Reported

REVOLUTIONARY MOVE

Disrupted Communication Facilities Prevents Casualties Check-Up

MADRID, Spain, Dec. 9.—(INS)—Acting swiftly to suppress a revolutionary uprising backed by Syndicalists and anarchists, the government today proclaimed a state of alarm throughout the country, placing Spain under virtual martial law.

A night-long series of disorders in various parts of the nation with bombings, rioting and shooting wide-spread prompted this extreme measure despite the fact the cabinet officials insisted the situation was under control. Disrupted telephone and telegraph facilities prevented a check-up of casualties.

Reports received from various provinces compelled the government to take drastic measures lest the revolt endanger the stability of the Republican regime.

Government leaders believed the disorders were part of a long and carefully planned uprising, and announced their intention of suppressing it with every means at their control. Heavy reinforcements of civil guards were rushed to key points to cope with the movement.

The uprising reached its climax at Barcelona where one battle lasted for more than three hours after which government troops and police finally subdued the radicals.

MARY PICKFORD TURNS TO STAGE FOR SOLACE AS HER "PERFECT ROMANCE" IS THROWN INTO COURTS OF LOS ANGELES

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Dec. 9.—(INS)—Mary Pickford today turned to the stage for solace as her "perfect romance" with Douglas Fairbanks was plunged into the Los Angeles divorce courts.

The little, blonde actress who has remained "America's sweetheart," indicated firmly that the crash of her 13 years' married life with a husband equally famous on the silver screen will not end her plans for continuing her distinguished career.

Miss Pickford secretly boarded the Santa Fe California limited train bound for the East shortly after the suit was filed.

"Mental suffering and anguish," she charged in her divorce complaint on file here, was caused by the actions of Fairbanks, now hobnobbing with royalty in Europe.

Protracted absences from Pickfair of Fairbanks led to the final separation of the pair in May of this year, she charged.

Friends, reading between lines of the divorce complaint, saw the real reason for the divorce in the divergence of the tastes of the two famous film players.

Life for Fairbanks, they said, meant social affairs with royalty, made airplane dashes about the country, hunting trips into the Orient, and all the athletic, fevered pace that only he could maintain. Movies, to him, were only incidental.

Life for Miss Pickford, they pointed out, meant the steady application of

Report Arrest of 81 "Pen" Riot Ringleaders

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—(INS)—Eighty-one convict ringleaders of the recent rioting at the Eastern State Penitentiary have been arrested on charges made by Warden Herbert J. Smith, according to reports from the prison "grapevine" today.

Warden Smith would neither confirm or deny the reports. He said: "At this time, I have nothing to say."

It was reported the board of trustees of the institution was attempting to arraign the 81 prisoners, including some of the toughest and most dangerous in the penitentiary, before Magistrate Thomas O'Hara next Monday.

Because of the danger that friends on the outside might attempt to free some of the prisoners at the arraignment, the warden was said to be planning to transport them to the magistrate's office in huge prison vans under the escort of the heaviest guards ever assembled in the city.

All the suspected ringleaders are now segregated in a separate cell block and the most intractable are confined in the dungeons, known as the "Klondike" among the prisoners.

It was said the prisoners will be charged with arson, assault and battery with intent to kill, attempt to escape, conspiracy and wilful and malicious destruction of property.

WILL TERMINATE 14 YEARS AS COUNCILMAN

John B. Chambers Resigns From Newtown Body; Is Moving to Township

TO SEARCH FOR LINES

NEWTOWN, Dec. 9.—Fourteen years of service as councilman from the first ward, John B. Chambers will on January 1st terminate his connection with that borough body.

Mr. Chambers, who is resigning, had two years remaining in his present term of office, but his resignation became necessary as he and Mr. Chambers are moving to Willow Hill Farm, the Chambers homestead in Newtown Township.

It is expected that Mr. Chambers' successor will be chosen at the January meeting of Newtown borough council. At that meeting business for the year 1933 will be completed.

Also at the January meeting Burgess Henry Afflerbach will swear in new members of council. These include: David L. Watson and Granville S. Stradling, first ward, who were chosen for four year terms; Robert McKenney, who succeeds Robert Craig from the second ward. Mr. Craig lost his seat when he moved to the first ward.

The council has instructed Mr. Chambers to have a search made and the lines of the remaining "Commons" along the Newtown Creek marked.

When this is completed Mrs. M. Anna Smith proposes to beautify the plot.

STATE COLLEGE.—(INS)—The Garden Club Federation of Pennsylvania will assemble here for its annual meeting on December 11.

Delegates will spend the next two days at classes. Amateur gardeners will witness demonstrations of the principles of agriculture to the development of the home flower garden. Laboratory studies of the principles of insect and disease control will be given under the direction of H. W. Thurston, plant pathologist, and H. N. Worthley, entomologist.

Coroner's Jury Decides Lancelotti Was A Victim of An Unknown Man Who Apparently Killed the Victim by Stab Wounds — Newtown School Students Give Second Presentation of Play — W. S. Lair is Named as Head of School Board at Morrisville.

A coroner's jury has decided that Albert Lancelotti, 29, Sixth street, near Fitzwater, Philadelphia, came to his death from stab wounds inflicted by a person or persons unknown.

The inquest, conducted by Dr. John J. Sweeney, of Doylestown, Coroner, was held at the office of Justice of the Peace W. Carlisle Hobensack, Doylestown.

Lancelotti's body was found in a field adjoining the Huntingdon Valley Hunt Club, not far from Richboro, on the afternoon of September 4. The dead man was discovered under a dump of bushes. Philadelphia police stated at the time that Lancelotti was facing a charge of aggravated assault and battery with intent to kill and had been released under bail in Atlantic City.

The body was identified at the morgue of George R. Leator, Doylestown. It was found in the woods by C. R. Brumfield, manager of the hunt club. Corporal W. Paul Snyder and Trooper George Sauer, of the Doylestown sub-station, and County Detective Antonio Russo, conducted an investigation. One arrest was made of a Philadelphian, who was later discharged because of lack of evidence to hold him.

The Newtown High School presented its annual musical comedy for the second time, last night, in the High School auditorium, under direction of Misses Beatty and Stickle, members of the faculty.

The cast included: Marry Shontz, as Uncle Pete; Jack Ogelsby, as Alan O'Day; Avis Gouley, Geraldine Bank; Francis Sutton, John Drayton; Elizabeth Tomlinson, Mimi; Adele Swayze, Dora; Lewis Stannard, Cornelius Bean; Gilbert Cobb, Amos Bank; Frances Newman, Lettice Bank; Wilmer Robinson, Sandy Bank; Wilmer Twining, Hunter.

Members of the dancing chorus were: Charlotte Kennedy, Carrie Arwine, Thelma Buckman, Gladys White, Alice Sutton, Margaret Fillmore, Beatrice Fillmore, Mary Nell Esche, Camilla Armsworthy, Edna Buckman. William Brown acted as business manager, with Harry Bendell and Robert Cahill as property managers. The scenery was painted by John Foster, a member of the alumni. Material for the scenery was donated by Frank Sutton.

One of the most ambitious home talent plays yet attempted in this section was given last night and will be repeated tonight in Phillips Mill in the art colony by students of Sole.

WILL CHOOSE THE MOST POPULAR CROYDON GIRL

"Miss Croydon Contest" and Baby Contest Will Be Conducted

IS SCHOOL BENEFIT

CROYDON, Dec. 9.—The question "Who will be Miss Croydon?" is on the lips of everyone here.

The "Miss Croydon Contest" is being held for the benefit of St. Thomas Aquinas Church School, and is taking place in conjunction with the country fair and bazaar.

The entire affair is in honor of the silver jubilee of the rector, the Rev. Father Thomas J. Nolan, who has served here for 25 years.

The "Miss Croydon Contest" will climax six nights of fun and frolic which will be marked from Monday, December 11th, to Saturday, December 16th, inclusive.

There will also be a baby contest, and this, too, is causing widespread interest, with many entries looked for.

Many of Croydon's young women will vie for honors in being acclaimed the most popular girl in this town.

The pageant director, Barney Tassell, and Mr. Foster are being kept very busy, as are their assistants, preparing for the big events of next week. The director and his assistants are insistent that it is popularity and not beauty that is being stressed in the "Miss Croydon Contest."

bury Boys' School. They will present Geo. Bernard Shaw's clever travesty, "Androcles and the Lion." Directing the play is Laurie Y. Erskine, the well known author.

The three stage settings show a forest outside of Rome, a Roman street and a scene behind the emperor's box at the Coliseum. These settings were arranged by Stephen Strang and John F. Pollinsbee. Mrs. Anna Whelan Betts will be in charge of costumes and Peter Hobbs will be stage manager.

Marston Hamline has been chosen to play the part of Androcles, with Stuart Mitchell, the lion; George Hunt, the captain. Leasner Swift will have the part of Spithos, and DeForest Anderson, keeper of the menagerie. Miss Elizabeth Pollinsbee will play the part of Lavinia, the Christian martyr, and others in the cast are Edward Muck, Ferruvius; Pem Thorpe, Centurian; Miles Kickpatrick, editor of the Gladiator; Harold Waring, wife of Androcles; Lewin Wix, Emperor.

Costumes are another notable part of this play. Mrs. Betts has had the help of Miss Ethel Wallace, local designer.

Election of officers and installation of new members featured the reorganization meeting of the Morrisville Board of Education.

Elected last month, two new members and one veteran were sworn in. They are Alvin Pratt, elected for six years; L. Leslie White, named for two years.

EXPECT PARLIAMENTARY SYSTEM TO FAIL

Leo Daudet, Fiery French Royalist, Believes End is Near

ABOUT 6 MONTHS MORE

By Edward Hunter

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent) PARIS, Dec. 9.—(INS)—Leon Daudet, fiery French royalist, gives parliamentary government six more months of life in France. This was his prediction, thundered into the microphone in front of an audience of more than 4,000 people, in an address which still echoes in many circles of Paris.

The mass meeting was pointed to here as evidence of the wide scope within which freedom of speech is interpreted in this country. "Down with the Republic! Long live the King!" was the cry of Daudet, while his enthused audience echoed "Vive le roi, vive le roi!"

It was noticed that Daudet in his prediction did not say that monarchy would follow in six months. His forecast was that the present parliamentary system would be displaced within that period.

The royalist mass meeting took place in two halls of Luna Park, a playground of Paris. The overflow from one hall piled into the second hall where loud speakers had been installed. Several thousand others stood outside on the street listening to other loudspeakers. A total of about 8,000 persons thereby attended the affair in one way or another.

"In spite of its 16,000 guardians of the police, France will overthrow the republic," he exclaimed, his fists clenched, his rotund face quivering. "Our country has proven that when it doesn't want any more of a regime, nothing can stop it from disbanding itself of it."

Curiously enough, almost half the audience were women, and were among the most enthusiastic applauders. As the mass meeting closed, the audience was led in monarchist songs by the Camelots de Roi, the royalist youth organization.

The fact that Germany and Italy have both concentrated power in a single chief was pointed out by every speaker, who saw in this a new danger for France, which relies on a divided parliament for its government.

The wildest applause of the night greeted Daudet himself, a louder and more enthusiastic applause than even given any of his statements regarding royalty. The monarchist movement in France is very much a personal affair centered in the striking character of Daudet.

Other speakers agreed that the parliamentary system was on its last legs in France, and declared that the choice could only be between a king and a dictator. The former would be preferable, they said.

A total of 1,881 licenses have been issued by the board, 1,087 to restaurants, 484 to hotels, 308 to clubs and two to importers.

PRISON TERMS GIVEN FOUR FROM BRISTOL FOR JEWELRY THEFTS

One Woman Included In The List of Those Convicted

SOME MUST PAY FINES

Indelicato Must Pay Value of Goods Stolen From Salesman

Four Bristol residents were given prison terms at Doylestown yesterday when convictions resulted in the case involving theft of jewelry from the automobile of a Trenton jewelry salesman here on the night of December 20, 1932, or the receiving of such goods.

Those sentenced were: Mrs. Margaret Mauro, costs levied, sentenced to from four months to three years in the county prison.

Augustus Indelicato, fined $25 and costs, sentenced to from one to three years in the county prison, and instructed to pay Lewis Newman, Trenton, the salesman whose goods were stolen, the value of the goods.

Albert Mancini, given nine months to three years in county prison.

John Marchetti, six months to three years in Doylestown jail.

The case grew out of the theft of jewelry from Newman's car as it was parked on Trenton avenue here, one year ago.

Mrs. Mauro pleaded guilty to the charge of receiving stolen goods. Her husband, Marco Mauro, was found not guilty. In the case of Mildred Angeint, resulting from the same affair, in which she was charged with larceny and receiving stolen goods, a motion to quash the bill of indictment was allowed.

Samuel Lasparella was found not guilty on a charge of larceny and receiving stolen goods upon direction of the court. He was however found guilty of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, pleading guilty to this charge. He was fined $200 and costs, and a prison sentence of from nine months to three years was imposed.

In a charge of assault and battery Lasparella pleaded guilty, the costs were imposed, and he was given a prison sentence of three months in the county prison, the terms to run consecutively.

Indelicato was found guilty of larceny and receiving stolen goods; and Mancini pleaded guilty as did also Marchetti.

The sentences were imposed by Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

Indelicato had during the week testified that Mrs. Mauro a former friend of his, had given him a ring for a Christmas present and later presented him with a watch. These articles were part of the loot which was stolen from Newman's car, it was alleged. Indelicato had denied that he knew the goods was stolen.

Peter Kowal, 19, of Trumbauersville; John Neamy, 29, and Peter Neamy, 18, of Haycock, were convicted in the Bucks County courts yesterday on a charge of rape. The prosecuter was Emma Viola Allen, 18, of Bedminster Township. The case was heard by president judge Hiram H. Keller. The jury was out but 15 minutes. When application was made for a new trial each of the three young men were released in $2,000 bail. John Hartzer, wanted in the same case, is said to be a fugitive from justice.

CHRISTMAS FEELING

We should know one thing well. Good times or bad times, or anything relative, have naught to do with the celebration and exaltation of Christmas. Thanks be, feeling here comes first, mind second. Millions of hearts respond to centuries of tradition. Detail vanishes and controversy surrenders. The tremendous assertions of love as power, redemption as truth and the Saviour as fact, take possession. Our better selves are borne on a tide.

The worst the darkest thinking can say is extinguished by the Christmas spirit. There is no measure. By comparison of that past within the memories of living men, these are good times and this a good year. Taking a range of nearly 2,000 years and noting how, amid such desperations as we now can scarcely conceive Christmas was observed, becomes another reflection. But Spartan philosophizing is needless. There is no measure, least of all a money measure. We are seized by that in the heart, forget restraints and—give. It can be no one's boast and becomes tawdry with too much show. It is normal.

As the Romans on the streets above in orgies celebrated the Saturnalia, or the ancient Feast of the Sun, the first celebrations of Christmas are said to have been held by the early Christians in the catacombs of Rome's below. In 400 A. D., by the Pope's action, Christmas became an ordained Church festival. Gradually, in the Christian world, Christmas supplanted earlier celebrations held prior to a concluding celebration of the New Year. Its centuries promulgate the conception of another sovereignty over life and the spirit as well, one in which self-sacrifice is the rule of action and love of mankind the power.

Christmas, 1933, will soon be at hand. Joy shall prevail against sadness, the dark places in the world be made bright, the unhappy made happy. It can not be otherwise. As it was centuries ago, so it remains. More widely than any message on radio waves is Christmas broadcast from heart to heart among the people of half the Earth.

EVOLUTION OF THE BRAIN

A scientist has proved to his own satisfaction, and doubtless to the extreme gratification of many of his fellow men, that the human brain is an unfinished product, that it is today in an intermediate stage of development and will go on getting bigger and better as the aeons roll on. This is something to look forward to.

There will come a day, perhaps, when man will not make such a mess of things as it now seems to be his fate to do. Perhaps there will come an end to wars. Maybe the pangs of love will vanish. The brain in its finished state might reveal to man a way to make a living without work.

Still, some are not satisfied with these bright prospects. Most people would rather have these things come about now. Man doesn't like being put off for a million or even for a few hundred thousand years. He is, in a word, impatient.

The disconsolate should find some consolation in knowing that the 1933 model human brain is bigger and better than ever. The human brain is passing through a rapid process of evolution.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.,—The year's first Mayfair party drew a brilliant crowd at the Beverly Wilshire Saturday night and lasted from 10 o'clock until almost dawn.

Not a single major case of distemper resulted and the near-estimating to melodrama was when the photographers walked out in a body. The boys who make the snap shots for the picture services and the fan magazines felt they should be allowed to come into the ballroom, but the Mayfair officers wouldn't let them any farther than the lobby downstairs.

Even the celebs when John Barrymore (wearing dark glasses) showed up for the party. He and Dolores Costello are Hollywood's prize stay-at-homes. Every one remarked that Carole Lombard and George Raft made a perfect couple on the dance floor. Mary Pickford and Gloria Swanson at one table. Johnny Farrow was very attentive to Marjorie Daw and Marian Nixon was out again with Gene Raymond. Lupe Velez wore all her bracelets and Johnny Weissmuller. Big mystery of the evening was Chuck Reisner who danced one dance in a gray suit and the next in a tuxedo.

Both Hal Grayson and Gus Arnheim played music during the evening.

After experimenting with 200 blue-bloods from the best families of Los Angeles, Pasadena and Santa Barbara, Fox officials will dress extra plays a much more convincing scene on the screen.

In fact, these moneyed extras-for-a-day gave plenty of trouble in the filming of the Jesse Lasky picture, "Coming Out Party."

They were the real thing all right. They had family trees, limousines, ghinillas, ermines and they came on the arms of high-limbed gents in tails.

But the camera, ever cruel to interlopers, found them not quite as casual and as nonchalant as they were supposed to be.

Half of them were afraid of the staring lens, the other half tried to hog it. And dozens of them committed the cardinal cinema sin—the vigorous chewing of gum during the filming of a scene.

Four times the take of the ballroom episode was ruined by the gum-chewers. Finally, Director John Blystone had to get out and demonstrate how the Hollywood extra can hide the largest wad of chicle simply by catching it under the gums.

They are dubbing Ramon Novarro's secretary as Hollywood's most deadly marksman with a snowball. During a bit of clowning with the "Laughing Boy" company in Arizona, he tossed a well-rounded missile at Lupe Velez and knocked her out cold. And won't he be embarrassed to have you find it out!

Constance Talmadge can get off the spot. They twitted her no end for getting the whooping cough, but now the dignified Diana Wynyard goes her one better by contracting the mumps.

QUICK GLIMPSES:

Ruth Selwyn flies east today. The usual rumors of divorce but both she and husband Edgar Selwyn deny them. The two may meet in Europe later on. . . . One of the amusing heroes of M. G. M. "Viva Villa" expedition was Morris Abrams, a script clerk. For one scene, Mexican extras were lighting tin can bombs with their cigars and throwing them into opposition trenches. As Abrams watched, one extra became excited, threw his cigar towards the trenches and held onto the bomb. The script-clerk dashed forward, snatched it away and tossed—the missile exploded in mid-air.

Maureen O'Sullivan will recuperate in Palm Springs after a snow leaves the hospital. . . . Really amazing, this Baby Le Roy. He is a year and a half old and he plays 200 scenes in "Miss Fane's Baby Is Stolen."

One of them is 250 feet long and the youngster has the whole screen to himself. . . . Carmel is the latest hangout of the stars. Ann Harding slipped there after her last picture and James Cagney recently spent his vacation in the little coast town. Now Paul Muni is trying it. Mae West's biggest rival as a fight fan is Alice Brady's colored maid who never misses a Friday night at the Hollywood Legion Stadium.

SYNOPSIS

Fear that Bill McGee, the racketeer, would wreak vengeance on her and her family if she refused to go out with him, caused lovely Patricia Warren to accept his invitations. Bill is shot by a rival gangster while in Pat's company. Pat rushes home in terror and her stepmother puts her in, saying the police are looking for Pat. Unable to find employment, Pat resorts to her card skill and plays professional bridge. Julian Haverholt, noted bridge expert, makes her his partner. While they are discussing business details at his home, Clark Tracy, the polo player and Pat's secret love, calls. She had met him once but he does not recognize her. Haverholt introduces Pat as his niece. She is indignant, but he explains later that he was thinking of her reputation and that it would be advisable for her to assume that role as long as she is to stay at his home. Pat visits her old home and finds that Bill McGee has wrecked her stepmother's dressmaking shop because Pat fled from him the night of the shooting. She returns to Haverholt who promises to protect her. Accustomed to poverty, Pat revels in the luxury of her surroundings. Reading an announcement of Clark's approaching marriage to Marthe March, Pat experiences pangs of jealousy. Following the settling of a bridge argument, Haverholt wants to give Pat a gift to celebrate their coming to an agreement. She asks for a roadster like Marthe March's. Pat meets Haverholt at the automobile salesroom and is surprised to see Clark with him. Clark tells Pat how fond Haverholt is of her and she is troubled.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

"You've chosen a car exactly like my fiancée's except that hers is red. You must meet Marthe. You'll like her."

"I'm sure I will," replied Patricia, wondering what his reaction would be if he knew that she had met Marthe and hated her heartily. She had a well defined notion that Marthe would not like her. "Julian has told me a lot about Miss March," she added politely.

"He taught Marthe all she knows about bridge," said Clark. "She tells me that she is almost good enough to be a ranking player. I wouldn't know myself. Car's are something of a mystery to me, always were, though Marthe drags me into a game occasionally." He smiled reminiscently. "Julian was once kind enough to say that after five years of close, assiduous practice I might, with luck, develop into a hopeless dab."

They both laughed.

"Bridge isn't important," suggested Patricia helpfully.

"That from Julian Haverholt's niece?" exclaimed Clark with affected horror.

"Don't ever breathe it," whispered Patricia, adopting a conspiratorial air.

Again they laughed, ecstatically. Patricia felt herself carried along on the man's amusement and interest. She forgot Marthe, forgot Haverholt, forgot everything except that Clark was watching her attentively and admiringly. How good looking he was, not handsome in the dramatic fashion that Haverholt was handsome, perhaps, but boyishly tan, slim hiped, broad-shouldered, vital as sportsmen are vital.

"Have you played much polo lately?"

"Not much—a little. The season isn't officially open yet. Do you like polo?"

"I love it," replied Patricia, whose polo had been confined to brief shots pictured in the news reels. She would have confessed an interest in anything which brought so eager and enthusiastic a light into Clark's eyes.

"You must come to the Club when the season begins," he remarked, delighting her by making future plans, putting their growing friendship on a firmer basis. He added reflectively, "Julian hates all out-door sports but perhaps with your own car you can manage to escape from the bridge table occasionally."

"I hope so," said Patricia composedly, "after I learn to drive it."

"You don't drive?"

"Not at all."

"May I teach you?"

"That would be nice," agreed Patricia, trying to control the absurd triumph of her heart.

"When would you like your first lesson?"

"When would you say?"

"Shall we say day after tomorrow, if you get the car?" Glancing at her shoulder, Clark amended, "You'll get the car. Here comes Julian! Look at him, would you?"

Patricia looked. The two exchanged a confidential smile. Julian Haverholt wore the expression of the cat who had finished the last of the cream. Certainly, no conquering hero had ever been more glowingly triumphant.

"Well, Patricia," he announced, coming up to them, "your car will be on the street in ten minutes. Does that please you?"

"A great deal."

"I knew that you would have your own way, Julian," interposed Clark. He added thoughtfully, "I hope the time never comes when I want something that you want too."

Haverholt's eyes rested upon Patricia. His glance was reflective, meditative. Somehow it frightened her. There was an interval of rather tense silence. For an instant Patricia had the fleeting, curious illusion that the two men, so strangely dissimilar, faced each other like antagonists in an invisible ring, like opposing warriors on some decimated battlefield. An absurd idea, but there it was.

Then Haverholt said lightly, "That's a rather unlikely contingency, Clark. My wants are few and simple."

Patricia broke in hurriedly. "Mr. Tracy has promised to give me a driving lesson on Wednesday."

"See that she doesn't break her neck, Clark. She's a reckless youngster at heart."

On Wednesday morning Patricia opened her eyes to the knowledge of something pleasant. She remembered instantly. The day was perfect, bright blue, a spring day even in the heart of New York. In the garden outside the trees were putting out their first tentative buds, the air was sweet and cool. She sang as she dressed, was still singing as she went downstairs. She stopped when she reached the door of the card room, knocked, slipped inside when Julian bade her enter. As usual he was seated at the card table, a stuffy, dull occupation thought Patricia for such a day.

"I suppose you're just in the mood for a session at bridge," said Haverholt dryly.

"Then, you've forgotten," said Patricia reproachfully. She continued self consciously, "Don't you remember I was to have a driving lesson today?"

"Clark can't come," Haverholt advised her baldly.

"Clark can't come," repeated Patricia as if the statement were too incredible for belief. "Why not?"

"He telephoned last night after you'd gone to bed and asked me to convey his apologies. He left early this morning with the Marches. They decided quite unexpectedly to fly down to Aiken."

"I see," said Patricia in a still voice.

She attempted to hide the extent of her hurt and disappointment. There was no reason for her to be hurt. To Clark, if not to her, the engagement had been a casual thing, a pleasant kindness extended to the niece of a friend, so completely unimportant that he had broken the engagement second-hand.

"It doesn't matter anyhow," Patricia began bravely, gallantly, "I'd every bit as soon play bridge."

"Don't lie to me, Patricia," Haverholt stood up. He said quietly, "Are you in love with Tracy?"

"What a question to ask," she faltered. "You know he's engaged to Marthe March."

"That doesn't answer my question. Are you in love with him, Patricia?"

"Of course, I'm not." She could even smile now. "It's too ridiculous to discuss for a minute."

"Then we won't discuss it. Heaven knows I don't consider Clark Tracy a particularly diverting topic of conversation."

Just then he said, "Perhaps you will accept my services as a driving teacher. I drive too, you may have noticed."

"All right," she said.

"Thank you, thank you very much," said Haverholt elaborately. "It's delightful of you to accept my second choice."

"You aren't second choice at all," she insisted.

"On thinking it over," remarked Haverholt, blandly, "I've decided that such an expedition would bore me. I'll call up the Madison Company have them send around a regular instructor."

And that was the end of that.

The days went by, days different from any that Patricia had ever known before. She took her place in the world of cards at Julian Haverholt's side. Bridge, bridge, bridge—they played by night, they played by day. Patricia saw no exception professional card players. She was pointed out at the Stuyvesant Club, at the Cavender Club, at the Kirkcaldie Club, as a coming star. Haverholt's friends and enemies grew to know her, they grudgingly admired her skillful play, they admired her youthful, glowing beauty, the men willingly, the women unwillingly. She was Julian Haverholt's niece. She was accepted.

"But shan't we ever do anything except play bridge?" Patricia waited after a session that had lasted for hours. "I'm tired, so tired," she muttered.

"I'm tired too," snapped Haverholt, looking it. He cursed the journeying of the car, picked up the speaking tube and cursed Otto. Patricia saw the chauffeur's back stiffen indignantly. She felt like screaming. They had played bridge all night. Dawn, cool and virginal, was breaking over Central Park. The city was hushed and beautiful. She could not appreciate the quiet beauty, or even see it. Cards seemed to march before her vision in a steady stream, second thoughts assailed her tired brain—if only she had done this, if only she had not done that, if only they could have stopped at some decent hour. . . .

Turning on the weary, exhausted girl, inert upon the cushions, Haverholt resumed his grievance in a voice studiously, insultingly patient. "It's not my fault that it's six o'clock in the morning. There's a quaint old custom to the effect that one gives one's opponents a chance to get their money back."

"They didn't get any of it back," Patricia observed sullenly.

"That's hardly your fault, my dear. During the last rubber, I was convinced that I was playing against the three of you."

"We won didn't we? How much did we win?"

"Plenty," conceded Haverholt for getting his irritation for the moment. He added complacently, "I thought old Pond would burst a blood vessel. There's a man I enjoy taking, the stupid, pretentious fool. He should stick to the packing business. What he knows about cards I could put in my eye."

MEAT, POTATOES and GRAVY

MANY a meal is built around these three standbys—meat, potatoes and gravy. Invariably they are the first dishes that come to your mind as you plan your dinner.

But in spite of their hunger-satisfying and nourishing qualities, this time-honored triumvirate can become monotonous unless it is supplemented by other dishes.

However, it is often a problem to find these "side dishes" in your own head. Of course you can quiz your neighbor, or ask the members of your family what they would like. But even this source of information is often lacking in ideas.

The thing to do is read the advertisements in your newspaper. Every day your local markets display their foodstuffs on those printed pages. You'll read of new vegetables and fruits that have "just arrived." Your appetite will be aroused by the tasty creations of national food manufacturers. With pencil and paper you can make your market list and menus before you step out of the house.

Speaking of monotony, consider this. There are 11 different cuts of beef, 9 cuts of veal, 7 of lamb, 10 of pork; there are at least 20 different breakfast cereals sold in every store, 16 different canned vegetables, 6 canned fruits, a dozen or more canned meats and fish, numberless varieties of cakes and crackers. Why should there be monotony in meals with such a variety of foods available at your store and so many of them advertised in your paper?

"PURE SILK CAN BE TESTED BY BURNING."
—MISS R. ARMSTRONG

Good Silks Cannot Be Made At Small Cost; Cheap Ones "Sleazy"

Good silk fabrics cannot be made at little cost. Cheap ones usually are sleazy or excessively weighted so that they will not last long, says Miss Armstrong, home economics extension representative.

Sometimes silk is labeled "Pure dye." If these words are correctly and honestly used, they mean that the silk contains not more than 10 per cent weighting (15 per cent is allowed in black silks) or was dyed "pure," that is, without weighting.

It is best to test silk by burning a sample. As pure silk burns it gives off the strong odor of burning feathers and leaves only a small amount of ball-shaped ash. If silk is heavily weighted, the ash will have almost the same shape as the original sample. The small amount of silk there burns away and leaves the metallic substances used to make the fabric heavy. Sometimes weighted silk feels harsh and metallic to the touch. Such fabrics also split and tear easily after a while. An excessively weighted silk garment will even lose strength as it hangs in the closet or lies in the bureau drawer.

If silk is offered at a bargain, tear a little place at the edge. It may be weighted so much that it has become tender since it was first put on the shelf; hence the low cost. This is a bargain that is not a bargain.

Spun silk made by spinning short pieces of silk fiber into a yarn is used particularly in wash silks. Such fabrics cost less money and usually wear well.

"HUNK" ANDERSON WAS FIRED LONG AGO, HE SAYS

ST. ANN'S DETERMINED TO WIN TOMORROW

By Davis J. Walsh
(I. N. S. Sports Editor)

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—(INS).—Now that everybody is letting down his shoulder straps and getting confidential with Notre Dame's private affairs, it seems only reasonable that the International News Service, having exclusively announced months ago what would take place in connection with Notre Dame football, should today state exactly what it has.

Therefore, we'll start with the statement that Hearty "Hunk" Anderson was not fired two nights ago or last night or last week. He was, to every practical purpose, fired last spring. Nothing that happened during the lamented season had a great deal to do with it, even to the five defeats and one tie. These might all have been exalted victories without materially affecting the situation. It has been said that alumni criticism during the season brought on Anderson's denouement but this is the sheerest of idle blather. They may hear their share of alumni criticism at Notre Dame but they're fortunately situated. It's probably an oversight, but they just don't listen.

Briefly, something of apparent importance happened during spring practice. I don't know what it was. Neither does Hearty "Hunk" Anderson. It was nothing specific; it even was trivial to the eye. But it convinced the wrong man that the cherished Rockne tradition was too soon being forgotten. In this case, any time is too soon.

The result, eight months later, was the abrupt withdrawal of Anderson and the appointment of Elmer Layden, one of Rockne's celebrated "horsemen," who is presumed to be the type that will revive this hallowed memory and make it live again.

Originally, the man who was to do this was Noble Kizer, of Purdue. But Kizer was Harper's man and Harper, like Anderson, was carried away in the debris when the front office was swept out. The signing of Mal Elward as one of the assistant coaches, with Joe Boland and Tom Conley, shows how far they went with Kizer. Elward was the latter's coach of the ends at Purdue this year.

But so swiftly did the climax come that more than one feature of the original program had to be abandoned. They had intended, for instance, to make their official announcement of the change at the annual football dinner several nights ago but decided to withhold the tidings, rather than make a Banquo's feast of the affair. Probably the last man to think he had a chance a week ago was Layden.

For, at that time, there were two men ahead of him, the second being Charley "Gus" Dorais, of Detroit. He could have been the first without shocking anybody's sense of the eternal fitness of things. For, if Rockne caught the passes in the old days, it was Dorais who threw them. And in twenty years of coaching up and down the less frequented trails of the nation, he's never been known to have a really bad football team. However, Dorais is all right. He still has a good job and Harper and Anderson have none.

It is strange to see this pair, once so friendly and later so inimical, go out together, but, if there's any comfort in the fact, Anderson has the last laugh. He had plenty of notice. Harper had practically none.

As for Kizer, he has no cause to rush to the nearby sorority house and seize a megaphone. He held off renewing with Purdue for reasons that are obvious. Now, through no fault of anybody's or his own, he has to make his peace at Lafayette. This might be pleasant but it shouldn't be difficult, because he's fortunately situated, too.

He's one of those rarities you often hear about but all too seldom see. He's a football coach's football coach.

years, and William S. Lair, reelected for a six-year term.

In addition to being enrolled as a member, Mr. Lair was elected president. William B. Anderson was chosen vice president. Mr. White succeeds Walter R. Taylor, who did not seek reelection, but who will remain for three more years as secretary, having been appointed by the board to that office last year, for a four-year term.

Mr. Pratt, one of the new members, takes the place of Dr. Ralph M. Fox, a long-time member of the board, who was defeated in the November election.

Committees named are as follows: Finance, Mr. Anderson, chairman, Mr. Pratt and Mr. White; teachers and course committee, Mr. Anderson, chairman, Miss Carver and O'Neil; building and grounds, O'Neil, chairman, and Herman; supplies, Heenan, chairman, and Pratt; health, Heenan and White.

YARDLEY

Mrs. Harry Pickering and Mrs. Harry Smith, have returned home after visiting Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Taylor, Easton.

Miss Elizabeth S. Weeks has returned home after spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Carlton E. Rich, Doylestown.

With the band of St. Francis Industrial School leading them, the St. Ann's A. A. football team will march to their field tomorrow afternoon and tackle the St. Matthew Catholic Club of Philadelphia. The game is a benefit affair with the receipts (with the exception of the visiting team's guarantee) going to the Harriman Hospital.

The band is composed of 50 pieces and will wear their blue and gold uniforms to match with the colors of the St. Ann's football eleven.

The St. Matthew Club, which recently won the Catholic Championship of Philadelphia, was formerly the St. Cecilia Club. Most of their players hail from the Northeast Catholic High School.

To date the Bristol eleven has captured 10 straight contests and no team has yet crossed its goal line. The Bucks County champions are well aware of the fact that the St. Matthew team carries a five-man interference system and it will be quite a job to stop the rushes of the visitors.

During practice this week, Coach DeRisi drilled his proteges on knocking down the interference and breaking up the plays used by the St. Matthew team.

Coach DeRisi intends to start Cataline and Tulio at ends, Kornstedt and M. Seneca at tackle, S. Seneca and Angelo at the guard positions, Juno, center; Missera, quarterback; Bornice and Agresta, halfbacks, and Tershon, fullback.

The opening kickoff will take place at 2:30 o'clock sharp.

COMMUNICATIONS

December 8th, 1933.

To the Editor of The Bristol Courier.

Dear Sir:

Some time ago I wrote the Bristol Courier of the production of the grand opera "Carmen," given at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, by the Puccini Educational Grand Opera Co., under the auspices of the Music Department of the Pennsylvania University.

Considering the actual circumstances connected with it, I think it was more than satisfactory, as it met with moderate success. I wish to express through the Courier my delight in having seen in and outside the theatre a number of people from Bristol and to hear from those few who spoke to me, particularly the younger people, that they were glad to have been permitted to go and hear such beautiful music and fine singing. The only regretful thing about it was that those who have heard it for the first time were not acquainted with the story of the drama and consequently could not understand everything to get full appreciation therefrom.

To hear opera now, again presents itself. This time it is a different occasion, indeed, because it is the Metropolitan Opera Association of New York that will inaugurate its operatic season this year in Philadelphia, at the Academy of Music, Tuesday night, December 10th, with "Lakme" of Delibes. This opera will be given one week ahead of the series of operas that are going to be given at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, an event unprecedented in the history of the organization.

The revival of "Lakme" will offer to Lilly Pons and Giovanni Martinelli opportunity to sing together at the Academy of Music for the first time in Philadelphia. It will be a real gala night.

Delibes, in writing "Lakme," not only affirmed himself as a composer, after having produced with success before this work the ballets, "Coppelia" and "Sylvia," but wanted to give to the music lovers notes full of grace and color with a score that reveals at once the vivid description of the atmosphere which distinguishes the French opera.

The following 13 operas which the general Director Signor Giulio Gatti-Casazza will give in Philadelphia will be all on consecutive Tuesday evenings, save that of December 26th.

DR. JOSEPH PASCERI.

Frank Delia To Appear To Play Part of Comedian

Tuesday night the two-act play, "How To Get Married," will be presented for the first time at the Italian Mutual Aid Hall in Bristol. This play was written by Dudley E. Bell for a specially selected cast which includes Mrs. Theodore Megargee, Mrs. Parke Wetherill, Eleanor Keating, Marie Quaresmini, Dennis Roche, William Gallagher, Robert Morris and the author himself. One of the unusual features of the play is the selection of the cast prior to the writing. This plan has successfully brought out better characterization, and has confined the acting so that all amateur limitations are recognized, and nothing demanded of the players to which they cannot respond.

In addition to the two-act play, Mr. Bell has just finished a humorous skit which will be put on between the acts. This extra attraction has been added in order to fill up the entire evening, and new characters will be introduced, who do not take part in the regular performance. This skit is of the usual vaudeville variety and will include dancing by Houston Dunn, a former member of the famous Jack Donohue's team, and some local actresses whose names are being withheld on account of the surprise nature of the skit. The comedy work will be principally carried by Frank Delia, who is better known around Bristol as an expert guitar player and orchestra leader. It is Mr. Bell's hope to develop all types of amateur acting, and he claims that his discovery of this new comedian is very gratifying, as judged from present rehearsals.

Mrs. Lindbergh Among Aviation's Immortals

LINDBERGH AT START OF TOUR

AMELIA EARHART PUTNAM

CAPT and MRS JAMES MOLLISON

Despite all her efforts to avoid it, Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh no longer can hide her light under a bushel. Ever insistent that the mastery skill of her husband alone is responsible for their clean-cut flights, Mrs. Lindbergh's superb navigation is credited by aviation experts with being largely instrumental in the success of the great flight from Bathurst, West Africa, to Natal, Brazil. This flight placed Mrs. Lindbergh in the Hall of Fame reserved for ladybirds who have flown the dangerous body of water, north or south. The cross the South Atlantic in a plane and the third to fly the Atlantic with Wilmer Stultz in 1928 and did it solo in 1932, and Amy Mollison, who, with her husband, Captain James Mollison, made an East-to-West crossing last summer.

NEW YORK, (I.N.S.)—Although aerial achievement is no novelty to Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh and his charming flying lady, their latest feat in making a clean-cut flight across the South Atlantic from Bathurst, West Africa, to Natal, Brazil, was really a red-letter one for Mrs. Lindbergh, for it placed her among the select few daring women who have flown the Atlantic in a plane.

First and Third
When the Lindbergh plane taxied to a triumphant stop at Natal, Mrs. Lindbergh had become the first woman to fly the South Atlantic and the third to fly the dangerous body of water, north or south. The other two women who won immortal fame by similar feats are Amelia Earhart and Amy Johnson Mollison.

Only last July, Mrs. Mollison and her husband, Captain Jimmy, who are to Great Britain what the Lindberghs are to America, made an East-to-West flight across the North Atlantic, only to crash in a swamp at Bridgeport, Conn., a short distance from New York, their ultimate goal.

This was but the most recent of a remarkable series of flying achievements which the pair had recorded singly before they were married in what is regarded as the most notable romance of aviation. Before the double hop, Captain Mollison had made a solo crossing of the Atlantic. Colonel Lindbergh now joins him as the only man to perform the difficult feat twice.

The second ladybird in the trans-Atlantic "Hall of Fame" is the former Amelia Earhart, now Mrs. Putnam, who first earned international acclaim when, with Wilmer Stultz and Lou Gordon, she flew from Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, to Burry Port, Wales, becoming the first woman ever to fly the Atlantic.

Not satisfied with what she considered the small part she played in that feat, Miss Earhart made a solo flight over the dangerous route from Harbor Grace to Culmore, Ireland, in May, 1932, covering the 2,026 miles in fifteen hours and forty minutes, a record. Thus did Miss Earhart earn the distinction of being the only woman to fly the Atlantic twice.

Modest Anne
While Mrs. Lindbergh does all in her power to keep out of the spotlight that beats incessantly on her famous husband, attributing all the success of their clean-cut flights from place to place to his mastery handling of the plane, the Bathurst-Natal flight proved that she played no small part in bringing the plane straight as an arrow to its objective.

Observers who followed the course of the flight by radio are loud and lavish in their praise of the modest young woman who daily gambles her life on her husband's ability.

For instance, there is drama behind the terse radio flash sent out by Mrs. Lindbergh as the plane was encountering tropical squalls in mid-ocean. "Sky 8-10ths overcast," ran the message, "visibility three miles. All well." Anyone who has experienced a tropical squall can fill in all that Mrs. Lindbergh left unsaid in that calm little flash to an anxious world.

From no less an authority than Rear-Admiral King, Chief of Naval Aeronautics and regarded as one of the country's foremost navigators, comes this tribute to "Modest Anne": "Mrs. Lindbergh, in reality, is in a class by herself. Her reports of the plane's position, made every fifteen minutes throughout the night, proved to be unerring. The more praise is due her because charting positions by dead reckoning is a difficult task at best. Mrs. Lindbergh has proved herself an efficient navigator and a capable radio operator."

THOUGHTS and THINGS

THE business of living, when boiled down and all the froth skimmed off, is just a matter of thinking.

Each of us is continually thinking ideas of our own and swapping them for the ideas of others. If there is a famine of outside ideas we shrivel up ourselves. Children with "nobody to play with" are unhappy and unmanageable.

From thinking with our heads to doing with our hands is but a little step and then our thoughts become things.

It is because men of America are so unfettered in their thinking and doing that this country is such a fine place to live in. It is also because these thoughts are freely radiated and spread broadcast, in the distribution of manufactured things and in the distribution of the facts about them (advertising), that this country is such a fine place to live in.

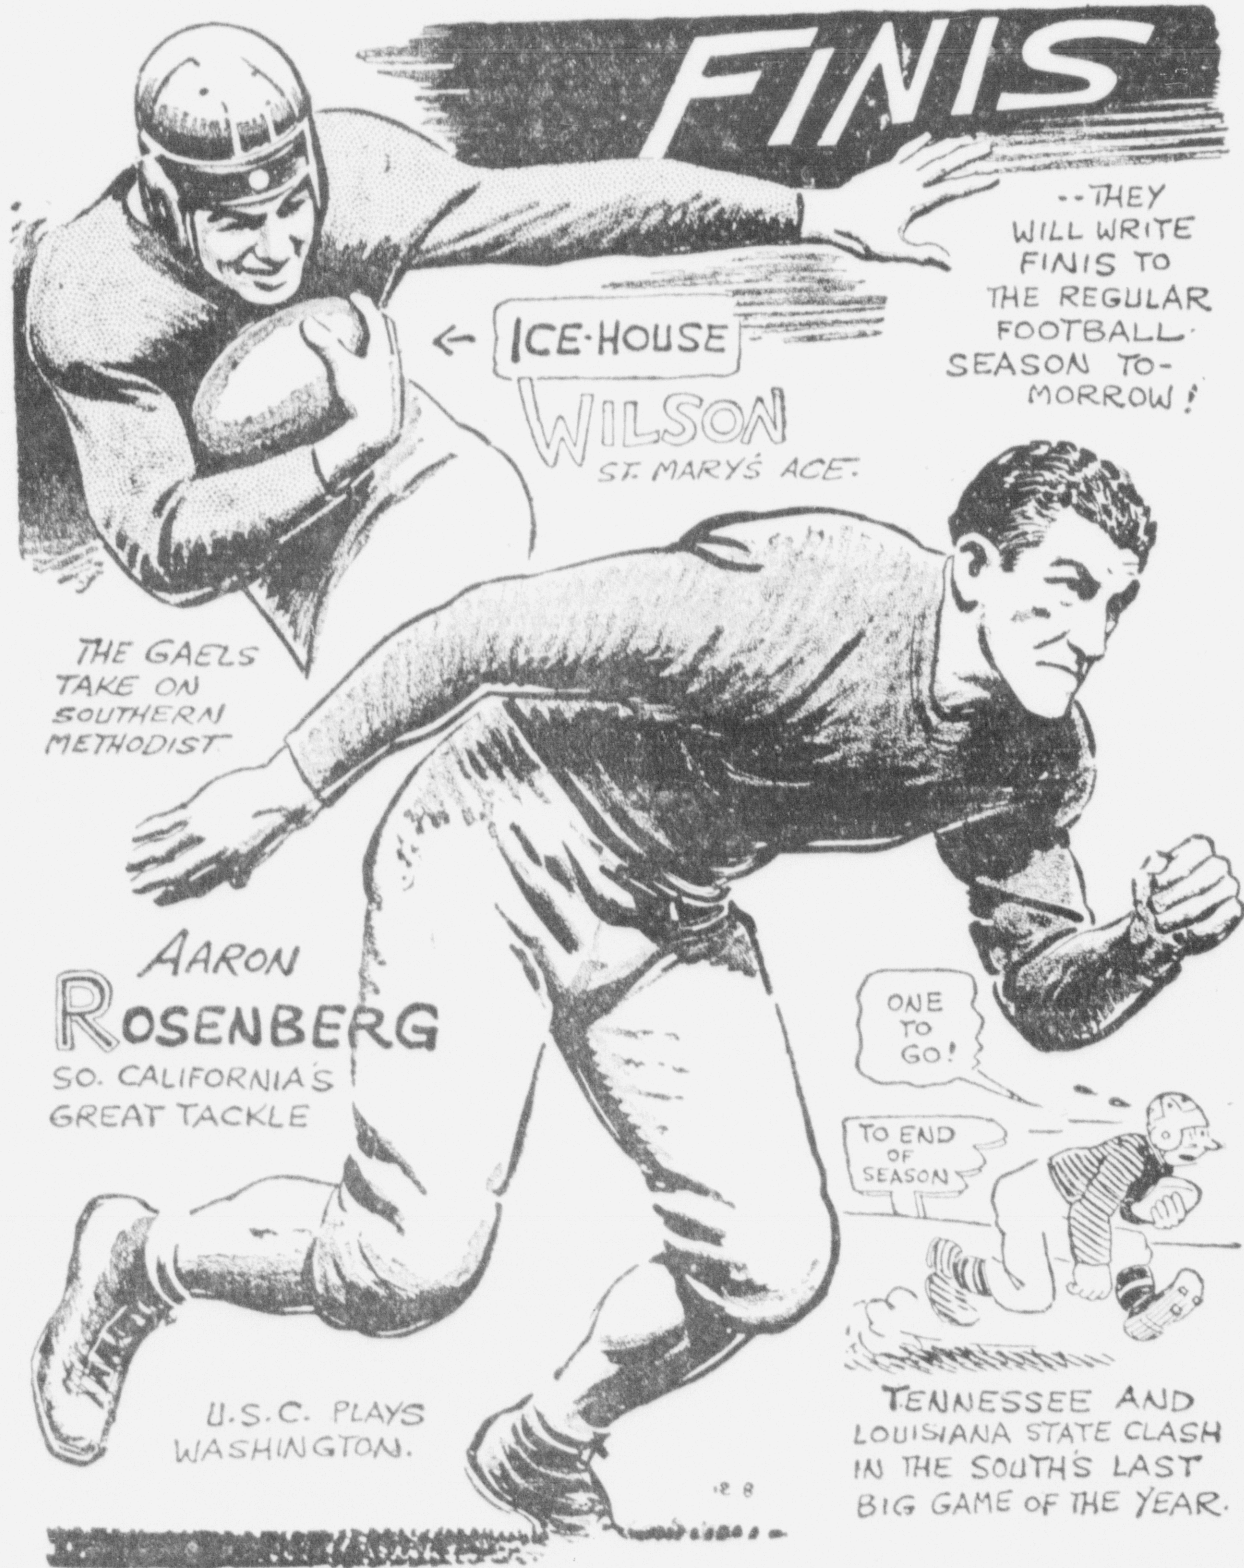

The originator of an idea is not much better off than before he originated it till he gets some one else to absorb it and enjoy it and benefit by it.

The man or woman surrounded by better thoughts and things but who pays not the slightest attention to them is not much better off than the one with "nobody to play with."

The advertisements in the papers are thoughts—telling you about the things that other men and women have created for your happiness. Read the ads. They are the voices from hundreds of thousands of looms, shops, foundries, studios, laboratories, where millions of minds are turning pleasant thoughts into worth-while things for your comfort.

Farewell to Football

By BURNLEY

TOMORROW will see the 1933 football season breathe its last, with five games listed on the regular schedule, only three of which are of any importance.

Southern California, which certainly plays the longest season of any major college, winds up its regular schedule by taking on Jim Phelan's Washington Huskies at Los Angeles in an interesting coast contest.

This game will mark the last appearance of the Trojans' great tackle—Aaron "Rosy" Rosenberg—misses U. S. C. plays in the Rose Bowl classic on New Year's Day. Rosenberg is a heady, fierce-charging linesman—one of the best in the country—and the outstanding tackle on the Pacific Coast.

Slip Madigan's Gallop'ng Gaels from St. Mary's clash with the Southern Methodist Mustangs in an intersectional contest at San Francisco to wind up the Moragans' 1933 schedule.

St. Mary's great halfback, George "Icehouse" Wilson, will be on hand to make life miserable for the visitors from the Methodist institution. A Dixie classic will finish the southern football season at Baton Rouge, La., tomorrow, when Big Jones' Louisiana State Tigers collide with the Volunteers from Tennessee on the former's home grounds. This game is probably the outstanding contest of the last day of the regular football season.

Louisiana State and Tennessee are both high class elevens, powerful and brilliantly coached. And will the fur fly when big Jack Torrance, Louisiana's mammoth tackle, tries to nail that shifty Tennessee reidskin, Beatty Feathers!
